Tulin was behind the bar when I dropped in on the Flying Dutchman, so I had to take a photo!

Marieke posed at the bar in Bourbon Street before putting her make-up on and hitting the stage with her band Smooth Ink.

Laura missed being in the Stun, so she got a job in Buster's and invited me for a drink.

Janice and Paula were at the party celebrating Susie's Saloon winning the Amsterdam Sevens Rugby Tournament, but left early to get the last bus home, as usual.

The Editor's Bit

June is one of the months I struggle with when it comes to ideas for the cover. If it's an even year, I can use the World Cup or Euro Championship, but I can't do that this year. This month's cover has no hidden messages relating to upcoming events, doesn't invite you to identify anything or ask you to guess where I took the photo from; it's the back of Centraal Station from the other side of the river.

I have to confess, I hadn't crossed the river since they finished the bus station and I've toyed with the idea of taking a photo of the roof with its Amsterdam in big letters as a possible cover for a while, but never got round to it. The deadline for getting this Stun to the printers was rapidly approaching, so after a chat with my creative consultant, who suggested having flowers in the foreground, I went for it. I can see the ferries from my house, so I waited for the sun to come out before I made my move.

Halfway across the river, the clouds came back, but I carried on. The whole roof would never have made a good cover photo and I couldn't find any flowers by the riverside, so we've got DAM and weeds instead. I like it, but there's nothing mysterious about it, so no Cover Competition this month.

Now that I've made that first step of getting on the ferry, it won't be long before I do it again. Next time, it will be to the Butcher's Social Club on a Saturday night, where former CC Café boss René now hosts a weekly live music session. They've also got ex-Coco's barman Adriaan mixing cocktails and are the answer to the age-old question of where to (legally) get a drink between 5 & 7 on a Sunday morning.

Talking of trying something new, we have a new contributor: the one and only Terry Mann. A lot of our readers will already know Terry, but how do I describe him to those that don't? Blues man? Philosopher? Comedian? Chat

Show Host? I'll let you decide. His column is on page 5 and you can see him live in the Waterhole on Friday 16th June at 20:00.

After a volatile season, Paddy Wynne and Jordy de Leeuw shared the top spot in our Premier Predictions League and will each get a €30 voucher to spend in Coco's Outback. The full final table is on page 21.

Sandra had been in town since before King's Day, but I only caught up with her the day before she went back to England.

With the photos from her birthday party on page 16, Joan must be a contender for this month's most featured person, but the photo-bombing Jennie takes the crown for the number of different places I saw her.

That's it from me; sorry I couldn't get more photos in, but everything else is here. Enjoy!

Andy

OLD LAMPS FOR NEW...

Some old people are very comfortable in their olditude.

In the third year of his university, Albert Einstein failed physics. That was also the year he came up with his general theory of relativity. I don't know why he's in this story, but I'm sure there's a reason.

Funny how old Mr. Rat runs in familiar circles on the same old treadmill, twitching his whiskers, and shouting that he's blazing a new trail to where ever he wants to believe he's going.

Mr. Rat's gods are old and musty, and don't let him see the frightening possibility of something new and wonderful.

Every day he gets presents from the universe and refuses to open the box to see what's in it.

So he lights his dusty old lamp, and prowls through the darkness with dulled vision complaining that he can't see.

Is this blunt and easy to understand? Let's say it another way!

Old age comes to those who are afraid to embrace the new possibilities that come to them!

Open your ears, eyes and heart to possibilities, and the possibilities will stretch you mind. If your body needs stretching, try chi gong or the karma sutra.

Oh Yeah. I remember now. Amongst Marilyn Monroe's effects was a thank you note from a grateful Albert Einstein. He was no Mr. Rat.

Luke is heading back to Australia, but had a drink in Coco's Outback with Nick, Hassan, Tamara and Klaus before he left.

Just an average Tuesday night in Excalibur, from what I can remember...

Tommy was taking a Sunday afternoon stroll and dropped in the Flying Dutchman for a drink with fellow Scotsman Frankie.

Ann and Jennie were soaking up the sun and sangria outside Josélito.

Lars had every reason to smile; his team from Susie's Saloon won the Amsterdam Sevens Rugby Tournament for the second year running, and he's got great bar staff!

ONE NIGHT IN...

Maloe Melo, where Ray Cashman posed for a photo with bar owner Jur after headlining on a Thursday night with his blues gumbo repertoire.

Franklin and Peter both host other nights in Maloe Melo, but they can't stay away.

After the main act, Kim was hosting a jam session, and Axel was one of the many musicians lining up to play.

I couldn't say no to a photo of Jur and Fi.

Hadn't seen Ireen for ages, so I had to take a photo of her with Ferry.

My wife is leaving me because I'm too understanding. Can't say I blame her though.

Finding a woman sobbing that she had locked her keys in her car, a passing soldier assures her that he can help. She looks on amazed as he removes his trousers, rolls them into a tight ball, and then rubs them against the car door. Magically, it opens.

"That's so clever," the woman gasps, "how did you do it?"

"Easy," replies the soldier, "these are my khakis".

I always believe in going the extra mile. That's probably why I lost my job as a train driver.

Two explorers come across a market stall in the blazing desert.

On the first table are crumbly biscuits.

On the second table are bowls of jelly.

On the third table whipped cream.

The first explorer turns to his colleague and says "This is a trifle bazaar."

My brother was so mean when I was a child. He used to glue the pages of his porn magazines together so I couldn't look at them.

JOKES

A businesswoman led such a hectic life that she decided to ease the load by making a clone of herself. The clone was a perfect replica except for the fact that it swore a lot. No matter what the woman did, she could not stop it from swearing. In the end, she was losing so much business because of her clone's foul mouth that she decided to end the experiment by pushing the clone off a tall building. She was subsequently arrested and charged with making an obscene clone fall.

I think the wife's taken the news of her favourite James Bond actor's death really badly. I came home from work early, and she's upstairs in the bedroom screaming "Roger, more, Roger, more." So I left her to it.

My best mate passed away yesterday so I went to see his wife today. I said, "Look on the bright side, at least he's not suffering anymore." She said, "He wasn't ill, he died all of a sudden." I said, "I know, I meant being married to you!"

*****

I saw a neighbour jogging yesterday and thought, "Wow, she's finally decided to do something about her fat arse." Then I realised she was running after the ice-cream van.

The Conservatives have pledged to invest in Merseyside and create 100,000 jobs if they win the election. The Labour Party now regard Liverpool as a safe seat!

Since my wife gave birth to our son, it's been sleepless night after sleepless night. Running off to Ibiza was the best decision I ever made.

So much has changed since my girlfriend told me we're having a baby. For instance my name, address and telephone number!

BEING FRANK ON FOOTBALL

Chelsea are the deserved winners of the Premier League in England and who could ever have doubted them, once they took a commanding lead into the New Year. Antonio Conte has been a revelation and the way he changed a losing system into a winning one, was one of the key elements of an inspired campaign.

As I suggested last month, few people would deny that they were the most complete squad in the Premier League and the fact that captain John Terry hardly got a look in, speaks volumes for their strength in depth.

Tottenham Hotspur had to be content with second place, but there is some consolation in this, as their North London arch-rivals, Arsenal, finished below them this time around, and they came close to winning the league of course.

But Chelsea were deprived of the double, when Arsenal won the FA Cup for the seventh time under the stewardship of Frenchman

Arsene Wenger, who will decide later this week whether he is staying or moving on. Perhaps by the time you read this, you will already know his decision and I for one, am hopeful he stays with the club he says he genuinely loves.

In Scotland, Celtic were the runaway winners again and this time they did it by a staggering margin. They ended up being 30 points ahead of nearest rivals Aberdeen, finishing on 106 points and undefeated throughout the whole league campaign.

In his first season in charge at Celtic, former Liverpool boss Brendan Rodgers completed a domestic treble and the man who was actually born in Glasgow said it was a dream come true. The only problem that faces him next term, is trying somehow to emulate it and even by Scottish standards, this will be a very big ask.

In Spain, Real Madrid took La Liga by three points from Barcelona, but the Catalans managed to lift the cup competition, so in terms of trophies, at least there was a semblance of parity.

Bayern Munich once again strolled to the Bundesliga title with a 15 point lead, although RB Leipzig did well to pip Borussia Dortmund to second spot.

Benfica were triumphant in the Portuguese Primeira and in Italy, Juventus won the Serie A by just three points from Roma and third placed Napoli.

Here, the celebrations were all for Feyenoord from Rotterdam, who had Dirk Kuyt to thank for not having to panic too much in their final encounter with Heracles from Almelo when he scored the first of his three goals early on. Ajax missed out in Europe too, when they were easily defeated by Manchester United in the Europa League final, to the obvious dismay of the watching crowds at the Museumplein in Amsterdam.

And we already know who is coming up from the Championship to play with the big boys next season in the Premier League.

Already we have Brighton and Newcastle United promoted and the play-off final between Huddersfield and Reading could not be decided in normal time, or indeed extra time and eventually went to penalties – which is surely the cruelest way to miss out on the Elite League.

That cruelty befell Reading, who were leading in the penalty shoot-out, only to miss two on the bounce and eventually go out 4-3.

So against all the odds, the side that were tipped to be relegated from the Championship this season, Huddersfield Town, now find themselves, for the first time in their history, in the Premier League. What a thoroughly nice way to end the season... Unless you happen to support Reading that is!

IN THE BACK

While Lee's daughters Ella and Holly were in town for a holiday, they paid a visit to the Hard Rock with Annie, Millie and Matt.

Francisca was behind the reception desk when I dropped in Durty Nelly's.

Big Franky got Matt from the Rolling Stones' production crew to join him on a photo behind the bar in the Pint.

I know Paula and Monika already appear in this Stun, and they work in a non-advertising bar who's name I can never remember, but it was a Tuesday night in Excalibur!

Menno did a great job behind the bar at Joan's party in Café de Roeter (see page 16), so he deserves a special mention.

Now he's retired, Tommy joins Pat for an after-work drink in Coco's a lot more often.

Lenore, Caroline and Jennie were radiating so much joy at the Rollende Keukens festival, my camera couldn't handle it.

Marcos played with Santanico in the Pilseria tent every day of the festival, so Fenne knew where to find him.
